WRESTLING WITH LIFE'S TOUGH ISSUES
What Should a Christian Do?
CLAIRE DISBREY

Faced with making moral decisions informed by the Bible, Christians can often be torn between "keeping the law" and "doing what love demands." Claire Disbrey suggests that Scripture supports both perspectives and offers a biblically based "virtue ethics" guide for believers.

The author provides helpful case studies of people caught in complex life situations—remarriage, suicide, compromise, abortion, social justice, generosity. Aligned with relevant New Testament passages concerning righteousness, freedom, wisdom, love, peace, and grace, these realistic scenarios shed light on the difficult process of deciding how best to apply biblical truths to specific personal decisions and painful ethical dilemmas. Includes a study guide for individuals or small groups and suggestions for further reading.

AT HOME IN A STRANGE LAND
Using the Old Testament in Christian Ethics
ANDREW SLOANE

The Old Testament is a conundrum for many Christians. Some find it puzzling, or even offensive; others seem to glibly misuse it for their own ends. There are few resources that help believers understand those Scriptures and apply them to their lives as followers of Jesus. Andrew Sloane addresses this need.

Bringing together both questions of interpretation and ethical application, Sloane "rehabilitates" the Old Testament for 21st-century believers and skeptics, providing an accessible study tool for laypeople and a valuable text for college and seminary courses on Christian ethics.

Reviving Evangelical Ethics
THE PROMISES AND PITFALLS OF CLASSIC MODELS OF MORALITY
Wyndy Corbin Reuschling
9781587431880 • 192 pp. • $22.99p

"Combining appreciation and critique, Wyndy Corbin Reuschling skillfully teased out the particular dynamics at work in the moral thinking of many evangelicals. By carefully analyzing the impact of several moral traditions on evangelicism, she invites readers into a fuller recognition of the shaping power of Scripture and Christian community, and into more robust practices of Christian discipleship. This book is an important contribution to understanding and strengthening evangelical ethics." — Christine D. Pohl, Asbury Theological Seminary

The Meaning of Sex
CHRISTIAN ETHICS AND THE MORAL LIFE
Dennis P. Hollinger
9780801035715 • 272 pp. • $19.99p • Available May 2008

Our culture is sex-crazed. That is no secret. But our culture is also deeply confused about sex and sexual ethics. Unfortunately, Christians seem equally confused, and the church has tended to respond with simplistic answers. The reason for this confusion is that the meaning of sex has been largely lost. Hollinger argues that there is an inherent, God-given meaning to sex. This meaning provides a framework for a biblical sexual ethic that adequately addresses contemporary moral issues. Written primarily as a textbook for Christian college and seminary courses in ethics and human sexuality, The Meaning of Sex provides a good balance between theological reflection and engaging discussion of the practical issues Christians (especially students) are facing.

8:00-10:00pm  "Sexuality Education for Religious Professionals and Clergy Project"
8:00pm Reception begins, 8:30pm Program
Regency D

The Religious Institute on Sexual Morality, Justice, and Healing and Union Theological Seminary will release their groundbreaking study on how emerging religious professionals are and can be better prepared to deal with sexuality issues. The report includes research on the curricula and cultures of a sample of U.S. seminaries representing a broad spectrum of religious affiliations. The research also identifies the characteristics of a sexually healthy and responsible seminary, best practices and future directions for seminaries, denominations, and ongoing education.

We invite you to a reception to celebrate the release of the report and discuss future directions for this work.

"The Moral Beauty of Assent: Retrieving Stoic Virtue Theory for Christian Ethics"

Although Stoic thought has shaped the Christian tradition in decisive ways, Christian ethicists largely overlook the insights Stoicism offers for contemporary Christian discussion of virtue. This essay expands and differentiates our retrieval of ancient ethics of virtue by exploring Stoic "assent" and its possible intersections with Christian ethics.

Rather than being tragically fatalistic, Stoic assent functions as a response to divine providence that is compatible with a Christian understanding of creatureliness. An assent-based ethic conceives moral agency as simultaneously free and dependent upon God’s grace and offers a mechanism for responding morally to experiences of suffering that make us aware of human fragility.

"Is Martyrdom Virtuous? An Occasion for Rethinking the Relation of Christ and Virtue in Aquinas"

In his Nicomachean Ethics, Aristotle argues that while most violent deaths are shameful, death in battle can be highly virtuous. Thomas Aquinas, on the other hand, considers the publicly humiliating death of the martyr to be the highest exemplification of courage. Can Aquinas do so without substantial divergence from his Aristotelian virtue theory? In this paper I argue that Aquinas’ notion of virtue presupposes an understanding of Christ as the ultimate ground for the determination of human excellence. This primacy comes out most clearly in Aquinas’ treatment of Jesus’ death, which grants martyrdom its status as both the highest instance of courage and 'the greatest proof of the perfection of charity.'

"Rejecting Euroamerican Ethics for a Latino/a Ethics of Jodiendo"

Eurocentric discourse on ethics is damning to the Latino/as. The focus of this paper is to analyze three twentieth century Eurocentric ethicists (Rauschenbusch, R. Niebuhr, Hauerwas) to examine their complicity with empire, and thus their opposition to marginalized communities. True, they challenged and critiqued the empire but in the final analysis, Euroamerican ethicists contributed to undergirding racial and ethnic assumptions that provided justification for the empire. I suggest a liberative ethics which I call an ethics "para joder," literally "to screw with." Because the Latino/a community stand before the vastness of neoliberalism, little hope for radical change provides few ethical alternatives. When Hispanics starts to joder, it literally creates instability, it is an ethics that upsets the prevailing social order designed to maintain empire.

"Consuming Christ: The Role of Jesus in Christian Food Ethics"

In the early church, conflicts over eating – which foods were unclean, and the proper practice of the agape meal – sparked controversy. Today, Christians continue to debate food, asking about appropriate eating in a world where many go hungry and on a planet harmed by industrial farming and overconsumption of resources. Christ, I argue, holds an important place in Christian eating – as a model to be emulated and as a presence to be encountered (and, indeed, consumed). This paper sketches the parameters of a Christian food ethics, drawing upon ancient and contemporary sources and an incarnational, Christ-centered theology.

Convener: David Cunningham, Hope College

"Environmental Racism, Sustainability, and the Problem of Place for Christian Social Thought: Toward Neighborhood Ethics"

This paper argues that inadequate treatments of racism in public environmental thought and hesitant engagements with sustainability in Christian thought may have a common root: impoverished notions of place. If so, then fuller attention to place-based environmental justice and urban renewal movements may point Christian ethics toward fuller responses to the local-global tension of sustainability issues. I explore "neighborhood" as a membership and planning concept apt for theological attention to geography.

"Predestination and Theological Ethics: Abu'l-Hasan al-Ash`ari and the Divine Decree"

Abu'l-Hasan al-Ash`ari (d. 935) is one of the most significant figures in the history of (Sunni) Muslim theology. In this paper, I focus on the relationship between al-Ash`ari's account of the divine decree and two questions of religious-political practice: "who is a believer?" and "who should lead the Muslim community?" These questions dominated Muslim discourse in al-Ash`ari's day; in the 21st century, they are again central. I conclude by noting some of the ways in which al-Ash`ari's discourse provides insight into Christian, as well as Muslim ethics.

"Power Plays Between Social Identities"

This paper looks into the relationship between social identities and power plays. As a member of a community, our identity is socially crafted. We assume that these identities are not «powerless», but come entwined with power over other people from the same society (Foucault). Our research pays special attention to the struggle through which these social identities emerge in one particular pecking order and remain so or do change over time (Lukes). What is more, the paper shall try to point out the moral limits of these struggles (Farmer).

"Avoid (Intrinsic) Evil or Do (Proportionate) Good? Menstrual Suppression and Solitary Sex for Reasons of Health"

Anthropological and medical evidence indicates regular ovulation can lead to increased rates of ovarian and uterine cancers and use of the pill to suppress menstruation can lower those rates in women. Statistical studies suggest regular ejaculation, especially masturbation, can lower the incidence of prostate cancer in men.

Both findings challenge Roman Catholic Church teaching on "intrinsic evil" but are also potential candidates for application of the Principle of Double Effect. The purpose of this paper is to discuss the range and limit of "intrinsic evil" and "double effect" and the response of Church leaders in the internal and external fora.

"Living in Hope in Kentucky: An Assessment of the Hope VI Redevelopment Project"

This paper examines the state of affordable housing for the poor in the United States through the lens of Louisville, Kentucky's second HOPE VI project. HOPE VI promised a full transformation of the nation's most distressed public housing projects. We explore citizen advocacy in Louisville and the costs and benefits of HOPE VI for the former residents.

"Forgiving Oneself"

Recent scholarship links self-forgiveness to self-respect, understood as taking responsibility for moral wrongdoing and refusing to regard it as morally determinative. However, as the moral occasion for self-forgiveness, damaged self-respect neglects the "moral self-hatred" and grief our wrongdoing may occasion and neglects the role our moral communities play. As its moral motivation, self-respect lacks the affective nuance self-forgiveness requires. Christian accounts of forgiveness retain a robust sense of responsibility, account for grief over moral loss, challenge the impropriety of moral self-hatred, and invite an encounter with Christ that both extends a fitting remorse and locates us in a communal context of healing.

"Loving the Stranger: A Dialogue on Immigrant Labor"

The relationship between employers and employees has come under intense scrutiny and examination in the American Jewish community in response to allegations against one of the major kosher meatpacking companies. This session will identify the salient issues concerning the rights and obligations of labor both in this specific case and in other contexts as well. Practically, how should we act as owners, managers, employees, etc.? How has the Jewish community responded? How should the community respond? These and other questions will be examined through discussion and text study in light of Jewish ethical aspirations.

12:45-2:00pm  Student Caucus  (Pre-registration needed for lunch.)  Regency Ballroom C

The Student Caucus will host a roundtable lunch session and business meeting. This is an opportunity to meet fellow graduate students as well as share thoughts and questions on graduate school life. A portion of this year's caucus lunch will be dedicated to professional development, with experienced individuals offering advice on the issues of publishing and teaching.

Please see the registration desk if you have not yet purchased a lunch ticket.

12:45-2:00pm  Junior Faculty Caucus  (Pre-registration needed for lunch.)  Regency Ballroom D

The Junior Faculty Caucus is organized for the purpose of allowing Christian ethicists (pre-tenured Ph.D.’s and teaching ABD's) to help one another navigate our new roles as professors and scholars. In addition, we hope to encourage greater involvement of newer scholars in the Society of Christian Ethics, and to strengthen our communal voice with an eye toward shaping the SCE's long-term goals. Because we recognize that junior faculty members are whole persons, we schedule both business and social gatherings during each annual meeting. There is also an online network (http://groups.yahoo.com/group/scejuniorfacultynetwork/).

"Ethical Genre in the Digital Age: The Case of Reading Weblogs in Tehran"

Weblogs are emerging as an important forum for personal expression, community debate, and political leadership in the contemporary world. Ethicists, therefore, might wonder if and how weblogs function as a source for scholarly work in religious ethics. This paper uses Persian language weblogs posted in the Islamic Republic of Iran as a case study for exploring the ways in which weblogs represent a distinct ethical genre that is helpful for understanding the relationship between politics, moral discourse, and the production of religious knowledge.

"Eschatology, Anthropology, and Sexuality: A Metaethical Venture in Christian Sexual Ethics"

In many church body disputes over the moral status of same gender unions the last line defense against the affirmation of such unions is often an appeal to homosexual orientation as inherently "disordered," rendering same gender unions unacceptable regardless of the loving and just qualities they may embody. This paper challenges that traditional view on the basis of a biblical anthropology shaped by the eschatological orientation of the scriptures and further enhanced by contemporary Trinitarian discourse. Furthermore, this proposal raises a key metaethical question of the theological foundations that inform sexual ethics in general.

"Christian Ethics and the 'Changing Face of Economics:' We Need to Talk!"

This paper explores cutting edge research in economics that actively addresses moral considerations beyond axioms of narrowly conceived self interest. Three significant concepts in contemporary economics are evaluated with respect to their challenges to and implications for Christian ethics: "natural justice" theories that are derived from economic game theory; "adaptive rationality" and the inclusion of a "taste for social good" in consumer theory; and "co-evolution" and contextual approaches to ethical economic choices based on findings from experimental economics. The paper concludes with a discussion of possible responses from a Christian ethics perspective and potential areas for constructive dialogue.

"Pauli Murray, Poetry, and Ethics"

Pauli Murray (d. 1985) was an activist, writer, lawyer, and priest whose work deserves attention from Christian ethicists. In this paper I first contextualize Murray’s life and works. I claim that selected poems, at times informed by her prose, articulate important insights about race, identity, and injustice in mid-20th century United States. Next I consider Murray’s theological anthropology in conversation with her poetry and with several contemporary theologians (especially womanists). Finally, I describe how womanist thought offers important pathways and focal points for considering the role and heuristic of poetry in contemporary theological ethics.

"Dietary Choices and Christian Ethics"

Choices concerning which foods to purchase and consume have profound ethical and theological implications. Among the realities impacted by our food choices are world hunger, ecology, human health, the working conditions of farm laborers and food processors, and the wellbeing of animals. My presentation will briefly explore each of these impacts, with particular attention to issues of social justice and ecology. Topics such as fair trade, the local food movement, organic agriculture, and the consequences of modern forms of meat production will be highlighted. The principles of Catholic social teaching will provide an ethical framework for these reflections.

"Illegal Healthcare: Do Undocumented Immigrants Have a Claim to U.S. Medical Care?"

Among the thorny arguments encircling immigration, one of the most contentious is whether undocumented immigrants should receive medical treatment. Christian social ethics has much to contribute to this public discussion. This paper first explores differing notions of justice and healthcare access. Second, it considers this hotly-debated question: Do undocumented immigrants drain the U.S. economy and strain the U.S. healthcare infrastructure or do they contribute to the U.S. economy and minimally use medical services? Third, it offers two arguments in favor of treating the undocumented: one on explicitly theological grounds; the second drawing upon a secular, philosophical rationale rooted in self-interest.

"Forgiveness and Judgment: Hannah Arendt and Oliver O'Donovan Political Ordering"

Hannah Arendt and Oliver O'Donovan offer similar, yet contrasting accounts of political ordering. For Arendt, speech is the chief political act which promotes forgiveness and promise keeping as the preferred means of breaking the spiral of vengeance. Forgiveness orients a political community toward natality: the possibility of new political action that renews the life of the polis. In contrast, O'Donovan contends that judgment is the supreme political act which simultaneously provides closure while opening a new public space for subsequent deliberation and action. Such judgments reinforce communication within the civil community that orients it toward its eschatological telos. The purpose of this paper is to critically examine these contrasting accounts of political ordering, and explore how they might be applied to public policy issues.

"If They Kill Us, At Least the Others May Have a Chance to Get Away': Virtue and Martyrdom on the Uganda/Sudan Border"

Recent ethnographers focus on the issue of risk in ethnographic research. However, they have yet to work out the grounds upon which they assume risk. This paper first makes the case that virtue theory holds promise for grounding and directing the practice of risk. Then I examine specific examples of indigenous heroism I have encountered in my fieldwork in Ugandan/Sudanese war zones. The third part draws upon Christian literature on martyrdom to ask to what extent the demands of a radically committed Christianity can be placed on the researcher.

This panel investigates two argumentative stances about how we ought to live. There are identity arguments which say that moral truth resides in the (true) story about who we are. And, there are truth arguments saying that the validity of moral beliefs should be determined independently of identity. In reality proponents of "the identity pole" often times hold criteria for true moral beliefs and proponents of "the truth pole" concedes that moral truth is not easily accessible. The task is to avoid the reduction of truth to identity and to clarify the role of identity in the validation of moral beliefs.

Respondent: Irene Oh, University of Miami

This year's meeting features a panel discussion of The Rights of God: Islam, Human Rights, and Comparative Ethics, by Irene Oh (Georgetown, 2007). This book examines the relationship between Islam and human rights through the lens of three Muslim thinkers concerned with social justice issues in the post-colonial context—Abul Maududi (India/Pakistan), Sayyid Qutb (Egypt), and Abdolkarim Soroush (Iran). David Hollenbach will comment from the perspective of religion and human rights theory; Bridget Blomfield will comment from the perspective of Islamic ethics and political thought; and Irene Oh will respond. "Liturgy, Ethics, and Environmental Racism: a Conversation with Gordon Lathrop"

The 2009 Liturgy and Ethics Interest Group will engage questions of environmental racism in relation to liturgy and ethics by an author-meets-critics session on the magisterial trilogy Holy Things, Holy People and Holy Ground by Gordon W. Lathrop. Published in 1993, 1999, and 2003, this major work in liturgical theology engages ethical concerns—and especially ecological ethics—as an important theme. Cynthia Moe-Lobeda and Christian Scharen will respond to Lathrop's trilogy, raising critical questions about the ability of his work to respond to environmental racism with liturgical vision and practices to restore health to the body politics. A response by Lathrop and open conversation will follow.

"Contemporary Business Ethics and Jewish Business Ethics: A Comparative Analysis"

The paper attempts to compare secular or contemporary approaches to business ethics with Judaism's approach to business ethics. Comparisons as to how each approach would attempt to resolve two specific ethical issues, bribery and insider trading, are discussed. Finally, lessons are suggested as to what each approach can learn from the other.

"The Dynamic Center of Reformed Ethics-Calvin on the Christian's Life as Free, Pneumatic Response (A Calvin Anniversary Study)"

July 10th we celebrate John Calvin's 500th anniversary. Applying French Humanism's critical intelligence, he mined apostolic sources for their way-of-life. Although medieval traits lingered on—notably his propensity for hierarchical control—some of Calvin's leads are more vital today than ever. Trinitarian reflections shape a dialogic-pneumatic ethic of personal response in which legalism finally gives way to Christian freedom. Pre-possession by Grace orients an open-eyed realism which can spin even the most negative experiences into an upward-spiraling drama of grace. Prayer becomes the "principal exercise of faith" and believers' actions take shape as outward extensions of their prayer relationship.

"Love's Beauty at the Heart of the Christian Moral Life: Constructing the Ethics of Hans Urs von Balthasar"

Like Jonathan Edwards, the writings of the Catholic theologian Hans Urs von Balthasar illuminate the significance of aesthetics for Christian ethics. Balthasar's attempt to critically retrieve the concept of beauty for Christian theology yields important ethical insights, culminating in an aesthetic and dramatic theory of ethics: one in which the perception of the beauty of God's love in Christ becomes a foundational experience for moral formation and ongoing ethical discernment. Johannine and Pauline in its emphasis on love and personal transformation in Christ, the theory makes ample room for freedom, creativity, self-realization, particularity, and narrative in the moral life.

"Donum Vitae: Moral Edict or Counter-Cultural Anthropological Statement?"

Reproductive technologies are subtly re-shaping our understanding of human freedom, finitude, and embodiment. This paper explores the dominant anthropological framework operating in the use and ethical assessment of reproductive technologies. I will argue that official Catholic teaching on reproductive technologies (Donum Vitae), while rejecting most forms of reproductive technologies, provides a viable theological anthropology that challenges the more dominant anthropological framework. The document affirms the intrinsic value, dignity, and worth of both the infertile person and the childless marriage. Lastly, I will discuss unexamined issues in and potentially unintended consequences of Donum Vitae for theologies of marriage.

"Latina/o Ethics and the Use of Force: Examining the Just War Tradition Through Latina/o Eyes"

This paper uses tools from Latina/o theology to analyze the ethics of the use of force in the war on terror.

Grounded on the daily experience of Latinos, Latina/o theology highlights the themes of mestizaje (cultural mixing with roots in conquest and colonialism), lo cotidiano, and an anthropology of nosotros (the "we" rather than the "I"), among others, through the use of postcolonial theory, social analysis, and cultural critique.

Insights include an understanding of the reality of societies at war (lo cotidiano of an endless war); analysis of cultural violence and a new wave of mestizaje, and a vision of the global community as sojourners searching for liberation and peace—a theme shared by dominant and subdominant cultures, promoting global solidarity.

"Purposive Politics: What Paul Ramsey's Account of Deferred Repentance Can Teach Us About Political Decision-Making"

Paul Ramsey strangely calls politics a realm of "deferred repentance." I will explore the intelligibility of this claim by considering Ramsey's formal account in light of unpublished materials from the Paul Ramsey Papers at Duke University. This will include an examination of Ramsey's inheritance of the H.R. Niebuhrian theme of repentance as the Christian response to war and his distinction between repentance for righteousness and repentance for unrighteousness. Consideration of Ramsey's comments on repentance and politics will shed light into the nature of political decision-making and the moral context within which politicians pursue political good.

"A Return to Barth via Hunsinger: Jeffrey Stout and the Public Voice of Theology"

This paper will analyze Stout's return to Barth's theology in Democracy and Tradition. Stout believes that George Hunsinger's reading of Barth shows how theology can speak publicly and listen for "secular parables." Stout draws on Robert Brandom's inferential pragmatism to show how theology and others can offer reasons in public from different final vocabularies. These vocabularies cannot be rationally adjudicated, but one can assess whether theology is offering reasons to which it is entitled. Stout's view, I conclude, offers neither an adequate model for listening to diverse voices nor a way to validate theology's claims about the reality of God.

"A Better Economy: The Ethics of Creating Wealth and Reducing Poverty"

This essay argues that two measures of a "better" economy are 1) creating wealth; and 2) reducing poverty, and that the best way to reduce poverty is to create wealth, not simply redistribute it. I present the economic theory of Paul Romer and others who argue that the central mechanism for the creation of wealth is new knowledge rather than labor or physical capital. I consider issues of global poverty, inequality, and environmental sustainability through the lens of an ethic of "creative abundance" that affirms both the importance of individual freedom, as well the essentially social character of opportunity.

"Vices and Virtues of Old Age Retirement"

As baby-boomers begin to hit retirement age in 2010, they are faced with the prospect of 20-30 post-work years. Should this period have any goals or purpose other than be a very long vacation? Four gerontological theories present conflicting theories of what should be done with this time: continuity, new start, disengagement, and completion. Each has a place within a rhythm of life. But each of these theories point to several vices and virtues that become more problematic during this "third age:" of life: integrity and dissipation; self-gratification and generosity; repentance, humility and denial; trust and detachment.

"Prophetic Political Discourse: Pentecostal and Wesleyan Reflections on Peacemaking and War"

Panelists: Paul Alexander, Azusa Pacific University
Katy Attanasi, Vanderbilt University
Craig Boyd, Azusa Pacific University

The panelists explore the political protests of the Hebrew prophets, Pentecostal and Wesleyan practices of testimony and storytelling, and prophetic "protestimony" arising from twenty-first century Christians in contemporary majority world political discourse. With Brueggemann, they argue that without protesting the injustice of God and the injustice in the world there can be no positive testimony. The Hebrew prophets protested unjust political practices and affirmed wise public policy. Pentecostal and Wesleyan political discourse can be prophetic when it follows Hollenweger's "black oral root" and "critical root" trajectories by telling the stories of exploited people (protestifying) and creating empathy, action, and hope.

Speaker: Dawn M. Nothwehr, OSF, Catholic Theological Union, Chicago IL
Environmental racism lives on today as African American communities in Chicago suffer disproportionately from environmentally caused asthma, and poisoning by PCBs, mercury, and lead. This paper will first define "environmental racism" and then focus on a moral evaluation (in light of Catholic Social Teaching) of those health issues. Then it will show how knowledge from this evaluation morally empowered 150 Catholic African American youth to act for racial and environmental justice in their communities. Examples will be drawn from the 2002-2007 "Knowledge as a Path to Empowerment" project.

"Reverence for Life' and Pragmatism in Jewish Dietary Law: Judaism Responsibility for the Living and Kosher Certification Today"
This paper considers the ethical dimensions of the Jewish dietary laws in relation to arguments that they are, ideally, the practical correlate to a broader ethical sentiment we might call "reverence for life." Particular attention will be given to the Conservative movement's recent and high profile engagements with the ethics of kosher certification and the emergence of a new "ethical" certification for kosher food, Heksher Tzedek, run by the Conservative movement. With this contemporary frame in place, the paper begins its textual analysis with an examination of rabbinic conceptions of "reverence for life" in the Talmud (Bava Metzia 32a-33a and 85a). In the shadow of this text, the paper then moves back to modernity, considering the "pragmatic" responses to such reverence imagined by Joseph Soloveitchik’s Halakhic Man and three contemporary rabbis who have reflected seriously on the Jewish dietary laws and for whom conceptions of reverence for life are central to Jewish ethics: Samuel Dresner, Irving Greenberg, and Jacob Milgrom.

Speaker:  Joe Keith Green, East Tennessee State University

Spinoza is one of two thinkers before the 19th century whose thought gives hatred considerable attention. This paper examines Spinoza's understanding of hatred and the sense in which both the human good and the 'political project' entail overcoming it. Considering Spinoza's Ethics and Treatise on the Improvement of Human Understanding from this angle shows us that he occupies an interesting place in the history of Western moral and political thought between Augustine and Nietzsche.

"Public Bioethics and Theology: A Conversation"

Panelists: Lisa Sowle Cahill, Boston College
David P. Gushee, Mercer University

Professor Lisa Sowle Cahill from Boston College will open this session with her reflections on the relationship of theology to public bioethics in our culture. Internationally acclaimed scholar and author of the 2005 work, Theological Bioethics: Participation, Justice, and Change, Professor Cahill has challenged scholars who work in theological bioethics to enter the public square in order to seek positive change. Professor David Gushee of Mercer University will collaborate in the initiation of the conversation. Members of the Health Care Ethics Interest Group will then be invited to participate in what promises to be a lively discussion of the role of theology in public discourse about biomedical ethics.

Interrupting White Privilege

Acapulco

This group will gather members of the SCE and SJE who are actively interested in probing the dynamics of white privilege and white racism in their work and lives, countering those dynamics, and teaching for critical consciousness and active resistance to white privilege and white racism. Introducing Moral Theology
TRUE HAPPINESS AND THE VIRTUES
William C. Mattison III
9781587432231 • 432 pp. • $29.99p

"Those of us who regularly teach introductory courses in theological ethics know how difficult it can be to present the relevant theories and issues in an effective way. So it is very high praise indeed when I say that Mattison has written a first-rate textbook for beginners in this challenging field. Appropriating Aquinas's organizing principle of the virtues, he draws together the main strands of the Catholic moral tradition in such a way as to reveal its inner logic, and to present this in a clear, accessible, and attractive way. He shows his considerable learning lightly, and while he clearly aims to present traditional Catholic moral teachings, he does so in a way that invites thoughtful engagement and dialogue. This would be suitable for a number of undergraduate and seminary courses, and scholars in the field will find much of value here as well." — Jean Porter, University of Notre Dame

The Heart of Catholic Social Teaching
ITS ORIGINS AND CONTEMPORARY SIGNIFICANCE
David Malzke McCarthy, editor
9781587432464 • 256 pp. • $24.99p • Available March 2009

This accessible introduction covers the complete history and contemporary contexts of the church's involvement in Catholic social tradition, giving distinctive attention to the Bible, history, the thought of Augustine and Aquinas, and recent theological developments. Bringing together veteran teachers of Catholic Social Teaching who have worked together on the content, this book is designed to set social questions within the Catholic tradition and contemporary life. End-of-chapter application and questions addresses practical concerns, such as sexism in the church, charity, consumerism, and talking with neighbors and coworkers about social issues. Discussion questions, case studies, excerpts of church documents, and suggestions for further reading enhance the book's usefulness. It will work well for students of theology and ethics, particularly Catholics but also Protestants who want to know more about the Catholic social tradition.

"Deconstructing the DMZ: The Phenomenology of Peace and Christian Ethics"

The purpose of the paper is to develop a phenomenology of peace through the deconstruction of the DMZ: a global symbol of the perpetual conflict, hatred, and distrust. I begin my paper by identifying the degenerative moral ideologies that the DMZ has spawned in the minds of Korean people: "otherness as evil"; "sameness as unification"; "containment of war as peace." The deconstruction of the DMZ will be carried out through the phenomenological reduction of the aforementioned three moral ideologies. Through the tripartite reduction of the degenerative moral ideologies, I will present an idea that peace is not a mere state of the absence of war, but rather the radical embrace of the Other.

In recent years, efforts have been made to seek alternative practices of criminal justice which have all been loosely categorized as restorative justice. In this paper, I will first highlight some of the concerns about justice found in debates over restorative justice practice, showing the renewed concern about reconciliation, restoration and forgiveness. Then I will compare some theological responses to the U.S. criminal justice system—evangelical (Colson), Anabaptist (Logan), and Catholic (Skotnicki)—with an emphasis on imprisonment and reentry. Finally, I will sketch the challenges I see facing a Christian ethics aimed at engagement with U.S. incarceration policies.

"Transcendent Sources and the Dispossession of the Self"

I argue that Charles Taylor's conception of transcendence is radically kenotic and dispossessive, and explore how such a conception of transcendence animates Taylor's normative political vision in ways that are attentive to the contemporary demands of pluralism. I consider the relationship between this understanding of transcendence and the expressivist strains in Taylor's philosophical anthropology, especially as they are formatively influenced by Herder. I suggest that the kenotic shape of Taylor's theism is not only compatible with the 'weak ontology' that comes out of expressivism, but that kenosis actually underlies the contestability of his wider moral ontology.

"The 'Ultimate Sacrifice': Deadly Links between U.S. War-Culture and Christianity"

What would we say about the losses associated with war if we did not describe them as sacrifices? What would we say about Jesus' life and death if we did not associate the gospel narratives with a cosmic framework of sacrificial self-giving? The "necessity of sacrifice" operates as an electrical exchange between the institutionalization of "war-culture" in the United States and the understandings and practices of popular Christianity. This leads to an important and difficult question: is there any way to rehabilitate understandings of sacrifice for Christianity without at the same time aiding and abetting war?

"Marriage in Roman Catholic and Lutheran Traditions"

Roman Catholic doctrine on marriage presents a two-fold conception of the institution as a natural and sacramental reality. In Lutheran tradition marriage is regarded not as sacramental, but a matter of vocation. Luther's writing on marriage reflects a profoundly theological vision of marriage as "first of all institutions," created by God and arising from the requisites of human nature. This natural and theological view of marriage raises intriguing points of parallelism and distinction to Catholicism's natural and sacramental view. This paper outlines each tradition's doctrine on marriage, and raises points of convergence and openings for dialogue between the two traditions.

"Catholicism, Conscience and the Clinical Encounter"

Is it appropriate for physicians' moral commitments to constrain their medical practice? Do the social expectations that have come to characterize medicine and the physician-patient encounter mandate assent from the physician? This presentation considers the increasingly socially contested role of conscience in the clinical encounter. Drawing upon resources from the Catholic moral tradition, it examines the difficulty of determining the appropriate place of conscience in the professional life of the physician.

"What Common Ground? Reexamining John Howard Yoder's Indebtedness to Rabbi Steven Schwarzschild"

The purpose of this paper is to reexamine the relationship between the Mennonite ethicist John Howard Yoder and the Jewish philosopher Rabbi Steven S. Schwarzschild in order to demonstrate that Yoder was telling the truth when he claimed that he had been taught much by numerous Jewish friends, but "by no one else so much as by Steven S. Schwarzschild." By tracing Yoder's evolving interaction with Judaism and their mutual correspondence, this paper argues that they share a much broader set of convictions that contextualize pacifism both theologically and philosophically and that also provoke a critical rereading of Yoder's thought.

"God's Publicity and Earthly Sovereignty: The Question of American Empire and the Hope of International Humanitarian Law in Light of Luther, Grotius, and Niebuhr"

Reinhold Niebuhr analyzed the perennial structure of nations and empires as it revolves around power and prestige. These foci alone left Niebuhr—like Elshtain, Haass, Ignatieff, and Walzer today—unable to offer a critical theory of empire beyond mere admonitions against arrogance and overreach.

I explore Hugo Grotius' revision of the public declaration of war and locate a practice of international public accountability, or publicity. This impulse toward publicity has seldom-recognized roots in Martin Luther's theological account of earthly sovereignty. A theological account of international humanitarian law will couple publicity with power and prestige, thereby providing a normative distinction between nation and empire.

"Children and Moral Agency"

Three common situations in which children's moral agency is problematic—the downward creep of the age at which children may be tried as adults (child as perpetrator), of sexual abuse of children (child as innocent victim), and children's silence about parents' illegal behavior (child as conspirator)—demand that we tease agency-in-dependency and pursuit-of-good-in-subordination apart from agency-in-subordination and pursuit-of-good-in-subordination. Augustinian, liberationist, and ecological approaches to sin, as well as a moral anthropology of continuity, join this distinction to illumine children's moral agency, providing more widely applicable concrete alternatives to the still-influential Enlightenment norm of the perfectly free, autonomous moral agent.

"German Protestants and Catholics United Against National-Socialist 'Euthanasia': January 1940-August 1941"

This paper examines the response of the German Protestant and Catholic churches to the initial phase of the National Socialists' "euthanasia" program. The thesis of the paper is that virtually all German church leaders, both lay and clerical, opposed the killing of asylum patients. Members of the two confessions, after having gathered factual information, acted in three ways: (1) ecclesiastical leaders, asylum directors, and a judge wrote protest letters to government officials; (2) theologians analyzed the ethics of "euthanasia"; and (3) a bishop condemned "euthanasia" in a sermon, shocking the Hitler regime and producing an apparent "halt" to the killings.

"Living the Moral Truth: On the Ethical Hermeneutics of Klaus Demmer and Its Significance for Moral Theology"

Panelists: Roberto Dell'Oro, Loyola Marymount University
           Jan Jans, Tilburg University

The panel explores the moral theology of German scholar and Gregorian University Professor Emeritus Klaus Demmer. At the core of Demmer's undertaking stands the epistemological investigation on the nature of moral theology as a "science pertaining to meaning" (Sinnwissenschaft). In the first presentation, Roberto Dell'Oro offers an assessment of Demmer's fundamental moral theology in terms of a "transcendental hermeneutics" of Christian moral praxis. In the second, Jan Jans shows how Demmer's theory of action fruitfully engages contemporary questions of pluralism and opens a promising route towards intercultural ethics. Practical implications of Demmer's fundamental moral theology will be addressed by each presenter with reference, respectively, to bioethics (Dell'Oro) and social ethics (Jans).

"Morality, Public Policy, and the Life-Chances of Poor Black Communities"

Panelists: Emilie Townes, Yale University
           Joan Martin, Episcopal Divinity School
           Darryl M. Trimiew, Medgar Evers College

This particular panel not only explores how public policy shapes the life chances of poor black communities but also probes how both Christian ethicists and faith communities should respond to policy issues that inhibit quality of life for poor Blacks. Because policies regulate the material realities of poor blacks (and all poor people regardless of color), it becomes important to discuss and recommend the type of social justice actions that can respond to all policies and political processes that vitiate black people's sense of well-being and wholeness.

"Pass the Gefilte Fish: A Guide to Ethical Eating"

In the United States, poor diet and a lack of physical activity will soon become the leading cause of preventable death. Obesity is a health care crisis, not only in our country, but in many places around the world. This paper examines the Jewish and Christian thought regarding ethical eating. Jewish sources, which include Biblical, Talmud, Halachic (Jewish law) and Chassidic sources are reviewed, along with Christian sources. An ethical analysis of autonomy in this context is presented. Finally, implications for a future constructive ethic will be proposed.

"What Has Become of Conscience? -- ‘Humanae Vitae’ Plus 40"

This paper is not a "Quadragesimo Anno" for "Humanae Vitae." Rather, it is an exploration of some pressing theological and pastoral questions for the Catholic community four decades after and in light of Paul VI's historic encyclical.

The focus especially is on conscience. Over the last forty years Catholic discourse about conscience has gone in diverse directions. While theologians have written about conscience in ever more sophisticated and expansive ways, papal and episcopal teachings have given conscience less and less attention, especially in some areas of Catholic teachings, and the role given to conscience has diminished in importance.

"Ethical Response to Marginalization in Globalization: The Case of Sub-Saharan-Africa"

Today, Sub-Saharan-Africa is in a sad state of affairs. The region has become a by-word for distress. News on Sub-Saharan-Africa too often deals with warlords, massacres, refugees, drought, and famine. In a globalized world, Sub-Saharan-Africa goes more and more marginalized. The region is increasingly perceived as an entity that does not seriously matter as an actor in international affairs.

In order to understand the root causes of the current crises in Sub-Saharan-Africa the paper will highlight key historical aspects and analyze exogenous and endogenous factors contributing to the marginalization of the region. Furthermore, the paper will examine whether the structures of Globalization, namely the market, the different supranational institutions, their rules and regulations are producing ethically desirable results.

"Tragic Soul-Life: W.E.B. Du Bois and the Limits of Justice"

W.E.B. Du Bois discovered in the rural black church what he called "tragic soul-life" – the human innocence, fragility and strength that produced the aesthetics of Negro spirituals.

I argue that tragic soul-life informed Du Bois' moral imagination. This imagination suggests that the overlap between religion and politics in early 20th century America created the moral justification for black subjugation and beliefs about black inferiority. For Du Bois, the nation's moral disdain for blackness created a democratic tradition based on bad faith and a political liberalism ill-equipped to tackle the implications of suffering on our individual and collective imaginations of justice.

Convener: Jonathan Rothchild, Loyola Marymount University

James B. Martin-Schramm, Luther College

In the fall of 2007 the author was commissioned by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to draft a revised social policy statement on U.S. energy policy in the context of global warming. The study document and related recommendations were reviewed and approved for adoption by the 219th General Assembly of the PCUSA in June 2008. This paper summarizes the content of the social policy statement, gives extended attention to the ethical analysis and policy recommendations therein, and summarizes the debate regarding its adoption.

"All Politics Is Local – How Local? Subsidiarity's Lessons from Its Roots in Friedrich Karl von Savigny's Secular Jurisprudence"

Friedrich Karl von Savigny, renowned nineteenth-century legal scholar, influenced European political and ethical thought and especially the founder of modern Catholic Social Thought, Bishop Ketteler. Savigny’s System Des Heutigen Römischen Rechts (1840) contains the essential theoretical elements of subsidiarity in three ways that are still relevant today: general legal theory, constitutional jurisprudence, and a theory of "legal persons." He argued that legitimate law orders society's power relations according to its highest principles, protecting both social uniqueness and general principles of justice. Constitutions must respect local legal communities by protecting unique social structures, including religious institutions that have shaped society.

"Western Princesses in the Borderland: Christian Political Ethics and Military Prostitution in East Asia"

The governing interest of this paper is to evoke public scrutiny of military prostitution by raising criticism and ethical considerations in response to the conglomeration of globalized militarism and prostitution. Focusing on the case of prostitution around U.S. military bases in South Korea, this paper will contemplate (1) how the presence of American troops has affected Korean women's lives both in South Korea and in the United States and (2) what a (post)-Cold War Christian ethic should consider in order to elaborate on a justice-oriented ethic for women who are consistently exposed to sexual violence in the 21st century's globalized militarism.

"From High Deductibles to Clinton Care to Sicko: The 2008 Election and the Debate about Healthcare"

The 2008 election cycle has generated considerable interest. One of the most frequently discussed issues identified by likely voters in the 2008 election cycle is the issue of healthcare. This paper will give a brief history of the healthcare system in the 20th century and will then offer a consideration of the major proposals for reform, which range from consumer driven healthcare to a fully government-run system. Finally, this paper will argue that the consumer driven model is fundamentally flawed both from an economic standpoint and from a standpoint grounded in Christian ethics.

"'American' Orthodox Ethics in Western Public Life: Human Rights, Reconciliation, and War"

Panelists: Perry Hamalis, North Central College
Maria Gwyn McDowell, Boston College
Aristotle Papanikolaou, Fordham University

Respondent: David Hollenbach, Boston College

Three Orthodox Christian panelists will address the issues of human rights, war, and forgiveness in political discourse. Papanikolaou demonstrates how the interrelation between confession/truth-telling and affectivity illuminates the dynamics of forgiveness and reconciliation. Hamalis argues that conformity to "pacifism," "just war," or "Christian realism" eclipses aspects of the Orthodox tradition. Rather than withdraw, Orthodox thinkers may expand and enrich Western normative discourse through authentic participation. McDowell proposes an Orthodox human rights ethic of ekstatic love, oriented by shared responsibility for the unique and irreducible humanity of the other, which requires solidarity and intentional action on their behalf.

Interest Groups:  Families and the Social Order  Ethics and Catholic Theology

Speaker:  Cardinal Francis George, Chicago
Respondent:  Don Browning, Emeritus, Chicago Divinity School

The Families and the Social Order and Ethics and Catholic Theology interest groups will host a joint meeting focusing on the United States Catholic Conference of Bishops' new pastoral letter on marriage. Cardinal Francis George of Chicago will speak to concerns that led the bishops to take up the issue of marriage, the process the bishops used in drafting the pastoral, and their broader pastoral initiative on marriage. Don Browning, emeritus Professor at Chicago Divinity School and Director of the Religion, Culture and the Family project, will respond. All are welcome to join in the discussion that will follow.

Covenantal Ethics

Water Tower

Speaker: Louis E. Newman, Carleton College

The theme of covenant has played a major role in contemporary Jewish theology and ethics, as evidenced by the work of figures as diverse as David Hartman, Eugene Borowitz, S. Daniel Breslauer, and Elliot Dorff. Yet the notion that Israel's relationship with God is covenantal in nature has always been controversial. This presentation will explore some of the prospects and problems with covenantal ethics, then and now. I will suggest that in their rush to re-affirm the primacy of covenant as a category for Jewish ethical reflection contemporary thinkers would do well to reconsider the limitations of this paradigm as these have been articulated from biblical times to the present.

"American Exceptionalism: Is it Real and Does it Matter?"

All individuals, communities and nations are distinct. In this sense, it could readily be claimed that the U.S. is an exceptional nation, as are all others. Yet, when the phrase 'American exceptionalism' is used, it usually implies the U.S. is morally 'better' in comparison to other nations. But is any nation exceptional in a moral sense? And, if so, is the United States exceptional? If it is, does this have moral significance for evangelical Christians?

These questions will be addressed in a short paper by Jim Thobaben with responses from David Gushee and Stephan Holthaus, followed by a group discussion.

Monetary Policy
Speaker: Ken Bohnsack, American Monetary Institute

With the assistance of veteran campaigner for changed monetary policy, Ken Bohnsack of Freeport, Illinois, this interest group's analysis of our money system, which favors private commercial banks, and works powerfully outside the awareness of most people to the detriment of human and environmental welfare, will continue. Ken has long pressured Congress to require the Federal Reserve Bank to provide interest-free loans to all levels of government for urgently needed infrastructure projects, saving huge sums in interest. Having induced 3,395 local and state governments to support such legislation, Ken developed great skill in presenting his case compellingly to non-experts--like us.

"Applying Polanyi to Character Development, Practical Reasoning, and Undergraduate Education"
Speaker: Paul Lewis, Mercer University
Respondent: James Gubbins, Salem State College

Summarizing work in progress, this paper integrates the work of Michael Polanyi with that of developmental psychologists and neuroscientists so as to identify the possibilities for, and limits of, character development in a traditional undergraduate population.

The format for the session will allow for extended dialogue between Prof. Lewis and all attendees.

"Teaching, Race, and Ethnicity in the Ethics Classroom"

As our classrooms become more diverse racially and ethnically and institutional racism continues to pervade society, the Pedagogy Interest Group will look at best practices in addressing this increasing diversity and enduring racism. With an invited facilitator conversant in whiteness studies and critical race theory, we will share strategies, assignments, and resources for teaching about race and ethnicity in the ethics classroom. This session will be an informal workshop where the group's members discuss our teaching practices. Please feel free to bring syllabi and sample assignments to the session.

"Operation Gatekeeper: Immigration, Citizenship, and the Ethical Meanings of the Border"

The paper investigates deterrence as a central strategy of Operation Gatekeeper, the policy for monitoring and policing the U.S. border with Mexico. It identifies a subtle shift from deterrence that employs an economic theory of criminal law toward deterrence whereby governments build up defenses with the aim of mitigating foreign attack. Current border policy constructs social identities by distinguishing, often at gunpoint, between those who belong and those who are characterized as willful lawbreakers. The paper advocates for a shift in U.S. border policy away from a nationalist and protectionist posture and toward a democratic and pan-American standpoint.

"Prudence, Justice, and Quagmires: On the Weaknesses of the Presumption-Against-Injustice Position in Just-War Thought"

To locate war in a morally ordered space, Paul Ramsey, James T. Johnson, and George Weigel have focused upon what constitutes a good war. They have claimed that just-war thought is grounded in a presumption against injustice. This position has contributed greatly to contemporary ethics. But these scholars have also overemphasized deontic criteria to the detriment of prudential concerns, taken overly deferential positions in relation to established authorities, and articulated overly broad criteria for just cause. This paper begins with case studies of their work during the Vietnam War and the current Iraq War, and develops the above critiques of their positions.

"Moving Environmental Justice to the Center of Environmental Ethics: Implications for Ethicists"

Focusing environmental ethics on environmental justice necessitates that ethicists learn from and with victims of environmental injustices. It will also point ethicists toward adaptive ecosystem management which considers the interactions between all humans and the environment and prioritizes environmental actions if they are "win-win" and potentially reversible. Justice-centered environmental ethicists should also note the absence of environmental justice in our laws and indicators of environmental progress. These developments can help ensure that environmental justice not only is discussed in theory and in local communities but also is incorporated into social structures.

"Listening as a Path to Conflict Resolution"

In the recent past, "attentive," "empathic," or "compassionate" listening is being deployed as an important strategy in conflict resolution, particularly in track-two diplomacy. In this paper, I analyze and evaluate principles and practices of listening developed for purposes of bridging interpersonal and group divides. To illumine my analysis, I use a case study drawn from my recent participant observation as a member of a delegation of North Americans to Israel and Palestine with The Compassionate Listening Project; its main goal was to provide compassionate listening to adversaries in this Middle East conflict as an assumed necessary prerequisite to conflict resolution.

"What the Torture Debate Reveals about American Evangelical Christianity"

The discovery of detainee abuse at Abu Ghraib in 2004, followed by the release of government documents signaling that decisive policy shifts by the United States government contributed to such abuses, led to a dispiriting national debate about the morality of torture. An ongoing fracture between competing social-political visions in the evangelical world was revealed and further exacerbated by this debate over torture. This paper recounts and analyzes the torture debate as it occurred in the American evangelical community and theological-ethical lessons learned.

"The Great World House: Martin Luther King, Jr. and the Theory and Praxis of Global Ethics"

In a critical conversation with Hans Küng's global ethic, this paper studies the contribution of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s communal-political ethics for the theory and praxis of global ethics. While Küng's global ethic, due to its quasi-Kantian method, reduces thick religious descriptions into minimal moral codes (ignoring the structural dynamics of globalization, reifying grassroots religious movements), King's ethics, because of its historical glocal nature, overcomes this problem by integrating the global and the local, the religious and the civic on the basis of four synthetic components: vision (the world house), principles (human rights), virtue (love, justice, etc.), and transformative political method (nonviolence).

"I'm Standing Over Here Now: On the Waterfront and the (Continuing) Transformation of Christian Social Ethics"

On the Waterfront (1954) treats conscience, sinful social structures and soteriology in the context of real-life exploitation of NYC dockworkers. Using H.R. Niebuhr's models of Christian moral engagement, I argue that the attempts of Fr. Barry to convince the dockworkers to testify against their corrupt union presage the transition from "Christ Above Culture" to "Christ as Transformer of Culture" in Vatican II and beyond. Further, the journey of the Terry Malloy character illustrates a more contemporary development in Christian ethics which incorporates a feminist emphasis on healing and empowerment in the struggle against sin instead of primarily judgment and forgiveness.

"Gentile Christians and Torah: Between Scriptural Ethics and Natural Law in the Early Christian Community"

New Testament accounts of Gentiles and Torah-observance have recently taken on special importance. Most notably, both sides in the Anglican-Episcopal debate about homosexuality invoke them in support of their position. Using this as a starting point, I explore the roots of Christian ethics in Jewish Halakah. When the church welcomed non-Jews without requiring Torah-observance, what grounds were available for judging them morally upright? Was it an independent norm like natural law? Or a subset of Torah such as the Noahide Laws? This has implications for the Anglican homosexuality debate and, more generally, for the universality and public intelligibility of Christian ethics. It may also—as in the first-century—suggest ways of presenting Christian ethics to a religiously pluralistic society.

"Nooses in Public Spaces: A Womanist Critique of Lynching – A 21st Century Ethical Dilemma"

Lynching, a moral problem that provides insight into America's past and present, is more than a "rope and faggot." Lynching was always intended as a metaphor to understand race relations in the United States. How, then, might we interpret the proliferation of nooses in various American locales in 2006 and 2007? In this paper, I examine whether responses to a cultural symbol—the noose—can result in ethical possibilities that contribute to the common good.

"Christian Love, Material Needs, and Dependent Care: A Feminist Critique of the Debate on Agape and 'Special Relations'"

The recent debate about agape and "special relations" has come to an uneasy truce with Stephen Pope's observation that all participants acknowledge room for both disinterested universal regard and particular, preferential relationships within the Christian moral life. I argue that universal regard must be instantiated through the fulfillment of basic needs. I draw on feminist sociology and political theory addressing the contemporary organization of dependent care relations (relations between caregivers and children, persons with disabilities, and frail elderly persons) to challenge the notion that universal regard and particular relations are mutually exclusive, competing elements of the Christian moral life.

"Pragmatism and the Prospects for a Common Morality"

Panelists: Kevin Jung, Wake Forest University
David Little, Harvard University
Respondent: G. Scott Davis, University of Richmond

Both Little and Jung caution against the growing influence of pragmatism in religious ethics. Little argues that the disjunction between truth and justification by some pragmatists cannot successfully be sustained for a number of conceptual problems. A common morality cannot be just a happenstance of moral consensus in a society but must rest on justifiable moral claims grounded in requisite truth-conditions. Focusing on the distinction between representationalism and inferentialism, Jung’s paper critiques a form of conceptual pragmatism that privileges inference over reference. While socially articulated inferential reasoning helps make concepts and propositional contents intelligible, practical reasoning must also consider the connection between sapience and sentence as a basis of moral evaluation.

"Biblical Themes for a New Vision of Economic Life"

Speakers: D. Stephen Long, Marquette University
Kathryn Tanner, University of Chicago Divinity School

Stephen Long and Kathryn Tanner have done ground-breaking work relating biblical themes of covenant and justice to theological reflection on economic life. Each argues that the biblical witness to God’s grace provides a fuller expression of flourishing than do the ideologies hidden in many contemporary defenses of capitalist, free market economics, and that economic language can illuminate basic church practices such as the Eucharist. After both presenters offer a twenty-minute summary of their position, the remainder of the session will be corporate conversation with them about the methodological and theological issues at stake in Christian economic ethics.

"An Ethical Analysis of the Immigration Crisis in America Today: Issues for the Christian, the Citizen, and the Church Leader"

It is undeniable that immigration has been and will continue to be an issue that Americans will deal with in their daily lives for decades to come. Yet, there seems to be wide disagreement about what issues are important and what solutions are not only desirable but also feasible. This paper conducts an ethical analysis of current immigration issues. It identifies various problems, values, and obligations that cause the ethical dilemmas that face the average Christian living in the United States. It uses evidence and theology to examine and distinguish between cultural trends versus popular myths to help bring to light what makes immigration an important and controversial issue.

"More than Just Health: Towards A Christian Ethic of Decent Care in an HIV-Infected World"

Among global health institutions a "turn to religion" has become commonplace in the twenty-first century, especially as a strategy in the global response to the HIV pandemic. However, the limits and possibilities of this turn are better understood through a return to the ethical commitments animating religion and health partnerships in the 1970s. Drawing on the historical relationship between the World Council of Churches’ Christian Medical Commission and the primary health care movement, this paper points toward a Christian ethic of mutual transformation useful for assessing contemporary proposals (e.g., the WHO’s decent care framework) for "navigating the intersection" between religion and global health.

"Comforting Victims and Governing for the Common Good: A Lesson from the Historical Development of Double Effect"

In 1664, Juan Caramuel published his Theologia Praeterintentionalis, a treatment of the criteria for evaluating actions with effects that "are certainly foreseen, but nevertheless happen beyond and even against [one's] will." This volume, an important alternative development in the history of double effect, includes casuistry to demonstrate the utility of the intentional/non-intentional distinction for resolving practical dilemmas. Caramuel invokes double effect as a remedy for both the powerful and the powerless. His work reminds us that Christian ethics must be pastorally vigilant in its analysis of concrete circumstances, and grounded in the faith that God’s mercy outstrips human limitations.

"The Principle of Subsidiarity and Catholic Ecclesiology"

Since the 2002 uncovering of the Catholic priest sexual abuse scandal, movements have called for ecclesial models that allow for greater participation and empowerment among the laity, moving away from overly-centralized church structures that can serve as breeding grounds for the abuse of power. Can the Catholic social teaching principle of subsidiarity, which calls governments and the private sector toward more participatory and empowering roles at the local level, be applied on an ecclesial level? This paper argues that not only is subsidiarity compatible theologically with the church, but it is also necessary pragmatically in today’s current crisis of governance and participation within the church body.

"The United States Military Warrior Creeds and the Christian Soldier"

At the end of the 20th century, the U.S. Military experienced an “identity crisis.” In response to the post-Cold War culture, senior military leaders encouraged the development of a "warrior ethos" by introducing "warrior creeds." This paper argues that some of the moral imperatives depicted in these creeds make totalizing spiritual and political claims upon military members and reflect an unrepentant nationalism. Such claims can be challenged by the Just War tradition, which insists upon a chastened view of political authority and charity toward one’s enemies, thus resulting in a more modest description of military identity and its consequent virtues.

"The Politics of Motherhood: Maternal Ethics and Political Identity"

Although religions prominently portray mothers as vessels for the birth of religious leaders or as sources of unconditional love, motherhood ought also to be understood as a process of complex moral transformation. Drawing upon historical examples including the 2008 U.S. Presidential elections, autobiographical accounts, and secondary literature on mothers, I show how the dominant image of mothers as nurturers who lack ethical complexity can be subverted through feminist interpretations of religious texts. Experiences of motherhood may provide valid moral grounds for public civic engagement; however, maternal identity ought not to become the sole means for political legitimacy.

"Property Rights as Rites of Passage: Legal Ownership and Identity in Catholic Social Teaching and Sharia Law"

A consensus exists today that for people to participate in the economic well-being of society they must have legitimate and secure property rights. The belief that property rights are indispensable for a just economic order is widely shared in both Catholic social teaching (CST) and Islamic Sharia law. First, the paper will provide a comparison between CST and Islamic Sharia law regarding this right. Second, it will explore how each tradition can contribute to civil society by helping those in poverty create formal ways for them to document their property through legally acceptable tools such as title deeds and permits.

"The Nature of the Beast: The Character and Moral Significance of Hatred in Comparative Perspective"
Panelists: Diana Fritz Cates, University of Iowa
Joel Gereboff, Arizona State University
Keith Green, East Tennessee State University

The members of this panel will probe the ways in which hatred is conceptualized and evaluated within various philosophical and religious traditions. The panelists will also consider the impact that the religious-ethical study of hatred could have on efforts to understand and alleviate various forms of bigotry and malicious violence. Keith Green will delve into the Aristotelian/Peripatetic and Stoic traditions; Diana Cates will analyze the thought of Thomas Aquinas; Maria Heim will examine Theravada Buddhism, with a focus on the writings of Buddhaghosa; and Joel Gereboff will explore rabbinic, kabbalist, and contemporary Jewish moral literature.

"Wolterstorff’s Justice and Christian Ethics"
Panelists: Victor Anderson, Vanderbilt University
Nigel Biggar, University of Oxford
Jean Porter, University of Notre Dame
Respondent: Nicholas Wolterstorff, Yale University

Philosopher Nicholas Wolterstorff has long been a fruitful dialog partner for Christian ethicists and theologians, with his wide-ranging studies on epistemology, religion and politics, aesthetics, education, biblical authority, and social justice. Recently, he played an important role in published debates between Stanley Hauerwas and Jeffrey Stout about Christianity, liberalism, and democracy. His latest work, Justice: Rights and Wrongs, defends the centrality of rights as fundamental to any true account of justice. Justice-as-rights, he argues, is grounded in Scripture, predates the Enlightenment, and is the natural ‘first language’ for Christian ethics. This better accounts for the claims made by the oppressed and marginalized on each of us as individuals and on society as a whole. The panel explores this conception of justice and its relation to Christian ethics, to which Wolterstorff will offer his own response.

Conveners: Robin Lovin, Southern Methodist University

Despite secular ethical research laws and codes being created from the aftermath of the Holocaust, it appears that very little commentary is written about the relationship of human experimentation, Halachah and the Jewish tradition. Halachah and traditional Jewish concepts regarding medicine, physician and patient appears valid in formulating a response to human experimentation, researcher and subject. This presentation will review such concepts in research as informed consent, risk and harm, obligation to seek treatments from research, placebos and volunteering for therapeutic and non-therapeutic clinical trials and how they relate to Halachah and the Jewish tradition. We will present conflicting opinions on the use of research data obtained from the Holocaust and attempt to produce our own analogous determination on the use of this type of data in research.

THE RELIGIOUS COALITION FOR REPRODUCTIVE CHOICE
IS PROUD TO ANNOUNCE A NEW COURSE

Theology and Reproductive Choice

Created and taught at the Chicago Theological Seminary by:
Dr. Laurel Schneider, Associate Professor of Theology, Ethics, & Culture
Dr. Kathryn A. Lyndes, MSW, LSW, MDiv, PhD
Julianne Buenting, RN, CNM, DNS, PhD Student

We are offering this course to seminary faculty for use in creating and teaching similar courses at their own seminaries. Course materials include six versions of the syllabus:

A. Theology and Reproductive Choice (teacher’s version and student’s version)
B. Pastoral Care and Reproductive Decision Making in the Context of World Religions
C. Reproductive Decision Making in the Context of World Religions
D. Ethics, Theologies, and Reproductive Choices
E. Feminist Theological Perspectives on Reproductive Choices
F. Pastoral Care and Reproductive Decision Making

Also available is an extensive annotated bibliography created for the course—an invaluable resource for anyone interested in a serious study of this important topic.
